From Mr. Hilburn.

Editor Register—I notice in your last week's issue that you are opposed to the millenium, "Least wise" you oppose socialism and you say, in substance, that its advent will usher in the millenium. Probably, though, you are like a great many people who vote for what they don't want for fear that if they vote for what they do want they won't get it. Now, I don't quite agree with you, either in your premises, nor yet in your logic.

Economic development is forcing socialism upon us whether we will or not. And the co-operative commonwealth is as sure to be born as that men will do that which self preservation requires. And while we cannot prevent its coming, nor unduly hurry its advent, we may by the study of economic problems assist at its birth and lessen the pains of parturition. Will the people forever submit to panics with their accompanying depression of business, shutting down of mills, strikes, lockouts, famines and suffering in the midst of plenty, rather than that the public should own the banks and thus establish once, and for all time, universal confidence?

At Arcola, Illinois, during the great coal strike citizens of all ranks united and mobbed a coal train and confiscated the coal to keep from freezing.

Did they show good judgment? Or should they have sat still and calmly frozen to death?

Might not the railroads and coal mines at that time have been called upon, and properly so, to either furnish plenty of coal or show reason why the government should not do so? If such a thing occurs again, which is not at all unlikely, may we not have public ownership as a matter of absolute necessity? No, socialism will not necessarily usher in the millenium but it will mitigate many evils.

For instance, at Clio, a mill town on the Cotton Belt about seven miles from me and where I lived three years, there was enacted one of the most tragic scenes of recent years. The cause of which may be traced back to a judge's error. For had the judge appointed a receiver and cut out entirely the warring factions' at least two lives would have been saved. Or had this mill been owned and operated by the public there had been no warring factions and hence no murders. And if the public owned the shoe factories that old lady would not have contracted pneumonia through wearing shoes with paper soles, for your Uncle Samuel would not put paper onto shoe soles to be worn by the members of his own household. And if she did get sick by eating poisoned canned goods made under capitalism and left over because of no date on the label, she wouldn't have to take adulterated medicine. And there would be peace in the pepper only in the spelling thereof. And wars would practically be abolished, because ninety-nine out of a hundred of them are caused by a desire to enlarge the foreign market for our surplus goods. Surplus because of capitalist profits. For if labor got all its product it could use it all and then there would be no surplus for which to find foreign markets. No, the millenium won't come because of socialism, but we won't have any more panics, no more strikes, lock-outs or shut downs, no labor troubles, nor enforced idleness. For Uncle Sam would furnish work for every body who wanted it, and give the full social product of their labor in wages. Then about four hours a day would suffice to purchase all the necessities, and many of the luxuries of life.

This is sometimes called the leveling of society but as Edward Bellamy has truly said, "It is simply leveling the ground on which society stands, so that the tall people may be easily distinguished."

What is a Democrat?

The New York World, which has been a Democratic paper for years, asked the question some time ago, "What is a Democrat?" The question brought a good many replies, but in view of the widely different answers which the question received, one can hardly say that much light was thrown upon the problem, if problem it be.

It ought not to be difficult to answer this question, and it would not be if so many men calling themselves Democrats had not gone chasing after false gods. Everybody used to know what a Democrat was, for a Democrat was a man who believed, with all his heart and mind and strength in human liberty, in the equality of men before the law and a fair field for all with no governmental favors. A Democrat was a man who believed that a man had a right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness so long as he did not make a nuisance of himself by interfering with the life, liberty and pursuit of happiness of his neighbor. A Democrat could always be trusted (at least outside of Pennsylvania) to oppose paternalism in all its forms. He believed in a minimum of government. He stood pledged to repeal the tariff policy of the nation as soon he got a chance. He favored the closest economy in legislative appropriations. He held to strict construction of the constitution. He maintained that a man had a right to dictate to himself the religion for his heart, the theology for his head and the solids and liquids for his stomach.

The old-fashioned Democrat found the fountain-head of his Democracy in the Declaration of Independence and other political teachings of Thomas Jefferson. He found inspiration in such men as Andrew Jackson, Samuel J. Tilden, Allen G. Thurman and Grover Cleveland. No Democrat claimed that these men were infallible, but he held that in the main their political policies were right.

It appears that some men calling themselves Democrats have discovered that these old-time leaders were bourgeois, that while they did very well for the time they were at work, the time is now past, and that different counsels are now needed. Instead of holding to a strict construction of the constitution, they want to construe the venerable document as liberally as Mr. Roosevelt does. Instead of fighting paternalism in all its forms, they think that the government should give us a little more paternalism. The old-time belief in liberty they count a superstition. In Texas they have even gone so far as to pass a law preventing a man who is traveling through the state from ordering a drink when in a dining car, or even taking a drink from his own private flask unless he can show by physician's certificate that the liquor is used for medical purposes. And yet these men who have repudiated almost every political principle of the fathers of Democracy call themselves Democrats.

Mr. Roosevelt is a very popular man with Democrats of this type. A former Georgia editor, now receiving a princely remuneration on a northern paper, has even gone so far as to advocate the nomination of Mr. Roosevelt by the next Democratic convention. No wonder a good many old-fashioned Democrats rub their eyes in amazement and wonder what a Democrat is.

But this sort of thing cannot last forever. The old Democratic principles may be sleeping, but they are not dead. The stillest force is always the deepest, and down all the hullabaloo that Mr. Roosevelt has raised there is quietly forming a new sentiment which longs for a renaissance of the old Democratic ideas. Paternalism has had its innings under Mr. Roosevelt, and the present commercial crisis is a good object lesson for the people, as it will reveal to them how little power government has for evil. People are slowly beginning to return to common sense, and when once they shall have become fully clothed and in their right mind, the belief in paternalism will pass away, and a new enthusiasm for liberty—social and economic—will come into its own.—Kansas City Post.

Prohibit 'Em All!

How long will this nation consent to be tyrannized over by the coffee habit, the tea habit, the tobacco habit? Down with these pernicious habits! Down with a hundred more like them! Let us agitate the question until not a man in the United States is allowed to drink a cup of coffee or tea, smoke a pipe, read a book except the Bible, go outside of his house except to church and his office. And, while we are about it, let us agitate for a law forbidding men to think. Isn't all evil due to evil thinking? Certainly. And will not men be likely to err so long as they are allowed to think? Certainly. Then down with thinking! The legislature cannot pass a law to prohibit this monstrous thing too quickly.—Kansas City Post.

Danger in Asking Advice.

When you have a cough or cold do not ask some one what is good for it, as there is danger in taking some unknown preparation. Foley's Honey and Tar cures coughs, colds, and prevents pneumonia. The genuine is in a yellow package. Refuse substitutes. Sold by all Druggists.

Three Years for 25 Cents.

Farm Progress, the big farm and agricultural monthly of St. Louis, Mo., announces that the subscription price will be advanced to 25 cents per year, beginning January 1, 1908. Until that date subscriptions will be accepted at the old rate of three years for 25 cents. Farm Progress is one of the best farm papers in the country, and well worth the advance asked. Send in 25 cents at once to pay for a three-year subscription. If you are already paid up in advance send in 25 cents and have your time extended three years longer. A beautiful fruit picture, size 22x20 inches, will be sent for 5 cts additional to cover cost of tube and postage. Address all orders to Farm Progress, St. Louis, Mo.

A Common Cold.

We claim that if catching cold could be avoided some of the most dangerous diseases would never be heard of. A cold often forms a culture bed for germs of infectious diseases. Consumption, pneumonia, diphtheria and scarlet fever, four of the most dangerous and fatal diseases, are of this class. The culture bed formed by the cold favors the development of the germs of these diseases, that would not otherwise find lodgment. There is little danger however, of any of these diseases being contracted when a good expectorant cough medicine like Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is used. It cleans out these culture beds that favor the development of the germs of these diseases. That is why this remedy has proved so universally successful in preventing pneumonia. It not only cures your cold quickly, but minimizes the risk of contracting these dangerous diseases. For sale by the Arcadia Valley Drug Co.
